Fr. Kevin's Reflection

Continuing the reflection theme from last week of St. Stephen (cf. Acts of the Apostles) bringing the New Testament into the real world, we find this week's Gospel being the beginning of a new institution being built. Moses (Stephen says) made the tent of meeting, in obedience to God's command, according to the pattern he had seen on the mountain (cf. Acts 7:44; Ex 25:40). This means that the earthly Temple is only a replica, not the true Temple. It is an image and likeness, which points beyond itself.

David, who found favor with God, prayed God to let him build a tabernacle. "But it was Solomon who built a house for him" (Acts 7:47). The transition from the tent with all its impermanence to the house intended to lodge God in an edifice of stone is seen as a deviance, for "the Most High does not dwell in houses made with hands" (Acts 7:48). Finally, Stephen adds something to the idea of impermanence, which was conspicuous in the tent but obscured in the house. He brings out the inner energy of the Old Testament, which inevitably strove to get beyond the impermanence.

Stephen quotes the Messianic prophecy that in a certain sense forms the climax of Deuteronomy (cf. 18:15) and (for Stephen) provides the key for the interpretation of the whole Pentateuch: "God will raise up for you a prophet from your brethren as he raised me up" (Acts 7:37). The essential work of Moses was the construction of the tabernacle and the ordering of worship, which was also the very heart of the order of law and moral instruction. If this is so, then it is clear that the new Prophet, the definitive Prophet, will lead the people out of the age of the tabernacle and its impermanence ... out of all the inadequacy of sacrificial animals. He will "destroy" the Temple and indeed "change the customs" that Moses had delivered. The prophets who followed after Moses were the great witnesses to the impermanence of all these customs. Raising their voices, they pushed history forward toward the New Moses. This is the prophetic line that reached its destination in the 'Righteous One on the Cross' (cf. Acts 7:51).

Stephen does not dispute the words he is accused of having spoken. Instead, he tries to prove that they contain a deeper fidelity to the message of the Old Testament and, indeed, to the message of Moses. It is important also to note that the charge brought against the first martyrs of the Church is identical, almost to the letter, with the accusation that plays such a central role in the trial of Jesus. For Jesus was accused of having said: "I will destroy this temple that is made with hands, and in three days I will build another, not made with hands" (Mk 14:58). Of course, the witnesses could not agree about the exact meaning of Jesus' prophecy (cf. 14:59), but it is clear that such words played a central role in the dispute about Jesus. Here we reach the heart of the christological question (the question of who Jesus is) and at the same time we reach the heart of the question of what the true worship of God is. (More to follow next week when Jesus feeds the 5000.)

Congratulations to our newest Christian, Jamen Jesse Hartung, son of Jesse and Kindra, received the Sacrament of Baptism on Sat July 14, 2018 at St. Anthony's, Hoven. God bless all parents who are the first teachers of the Faith for their children.
