Fr. Kevin's Reflection

Allow me to pick up from where I left off last week. On the subject: ... how are we to worship God the way He wishes to worship Him? Again, this theme is focus of this week's readings and gospel as well. Joshua (in the first reading) reminds the People of God (as he reminds us of the 21st Century): are you going to worship God your way ... the imperfect (and even demonic) way; or, are you going to worship Him the way He wants to be worshiped? Don't feel too uptight about what God is asking from us. Even those who were following Jesus admit: "This saying is hard; who can accept it?" But ... Peter has to admit (though he doesn't get everything Jesus is talking about) in a kind of blind faith: "Master, to whom shall we go? You have the words of eternal life. We have come to believe (and are convinced) that you are the Holy One of God."

Allow me to pick up from where I left off last week (regarding the relationship and worship we give in our liturgical worship: I wrote about this some weeks back ... and need to try to summarize it again:

1. We must regard St. Paul's concept of: worship and sacrifice with spirit and mind (in theology class: logikē latreia), of divine worship in accordance with the Word of God (Logos), as the most appropriate way of expressing the essential form of Christian liturgy. This concept is like the forks in a river coming together ... the conjunction of several different streams: the spiritual movement of the Old Testament, the process of inner purification within the history of religion, human quest ... and divine response. The note: the small "L" ... that's the stuff coming from us) logos of creation, the logos in man, and the true and eternal Logos made flesh, the Son, come together. All other definitions fall short. For example, you could describe the Eucharist, in terms of the liturgical phenomenon, as an "assembly". Or, you could describe it in terms of Jesus' act of institution at the Last Supper ... as a "meal". But this seizes on individual elements ... while failing to grasp the great historical and theological connections. In contrast, the word "Eucharist" points to the universal form of worship that took place in the Incarnation, Cross and Resurrection of Christ ... and so it can happily serve as a summary of the idea of logikē latreia (worship and sacrifice with spirit and mind) and may legitimately serve as an appropriate description for Christian worship.

2. Finally (... I know ... I know: Where is all this stuff leading to Father Kevin? What are you trying to say?) All these insights open up an essential dimension of Christian liturgy, which we must consider more concretely in the next few weeks. (I have given you the theory in past reflections ... now to make them more understandable in the weeks to come.) As we have seen, Christian liturgy is a liturgy of promise fulfilled ... of a quest ... the religious quest of human history, reaching its goal. But it remains a liturgy of hope. It also bears within it ... the mark of impermanence (a movement from here to There). The new Temple, not made by human hands, does exist ... but it is also still under construction. The great gesture of embrace (Jesus reaching out to hug us) emanating from the Crucified Jesus has not yet reached its goal ... it has only just begun. (This is why we have the Crucifix being brought into Mass, hanging in the air above us at Mass ... even centered on the Altar ... as a constant reminder.) Christian liturgy is liturgy on the way ... a liturgy of pilgrimage toward the transfiguration of the world ... which will only take place when God is: "all in all".
