Fr. Kevin's Reflection

For the next couple of weeks, I am going to continue to reflect on the significance of the "church building". Why? Well ... I think we are forgetting the importance of these structures your parents, great grandparents ... great-great grandparents sacrificed to build for you and me. Also, for those who are not aware, St Augustine Parish in Bowdle celebrates the 100th year anniversary of the building of the current church in their community. And, as the year is quickly coming to an end ... I want to honor their memory and meaning of faith. Also, why we celebrate at the end of our liturgical year ... about a month away ... Christ the King.

But instead of continuing with these theoretical considerations, let us look more closely at the process by which church buildings took concrete form. Research has shown how the Christian house of God comes into being in complete continuity with the Jewish synagogue and thus acquires a specifically Christian newness (without any dramatic break, through communion with Jesus Christ, the crucified and risen Lord). This close connection with the synagogue (with its architectural structure and liturgical form) does not in any way contradict what I reflected on last week about the Christian liturgy not just continuing the synagogue but also incorporating the Temple. For the Jews saw the synagogue in relation to the Temple. The synagogue was never just a place for instruction (a kind of religious classroom as so many think). No, its orientation was always toward the presence of God. Now, for the Jews, this presence of God was (and is even today) indissolubly connected with the Temple. Consequently, the synagogue was characterized by two focal points. The first is the "seat of Moses", of which the Lord speaks in the Gospel (cf. Mt 23:2). The rabbi does not speak from his own resources. He is not a professor, analyzing and reflecting on the Word of God in an intellectual way. No, he makes present the Word that God addressed and addresses to Israel. God speaks through Moses today. What the seat of Moses stands for is this: Sinai is not just a thing of the past. It is not mere human speech that is happening here. God is speaking.

The seat of Moses, then, does not stand for itself and by itself, nor is it simply turned toward the people. No, the rabbi looks - as does everyone else in the synagogue - toward the Ark of the Covenant (or rather the shrine of the Torah) which represents the lost Ark. Putting a little meat on Indiana Jones and the movie by Steven Spielberg ... up to the Exile, the Ark of the Covenant was the only "object" allowed inside the Holy of Holies. That is what gave the Holy of Holies its special dignity. The Ark was seen as an empty throne, upon which the Shekinah - the cloud of God's presence - came down. The cherubim - representing (as it were) the elements of the world - served as "assistants at the throne". They were not self-subsistent deities, but an expression of the created powers that worship the only God. God is addressed as "thou who art enthroned between the cherubim". The heavens cannot contain Him, but He has chosen the Ark as the "footstool" of His presence. In this sense, the Ark embodies something like the real presence of God among His own. At the same time it is an impressive sign of the absence of images from the liturgy of the Old Testament, which maintains God in His sovereignty and holds out to Him (so to speak) only the footstool of His throne. During the Exile, the Ark of the Covenant was lost, and from then on the Holy of Holies was empty. That is what Pompeius found when he strode through the Temple and pulled back the curtain. He entered the Holy of Holies full of curiosity and there, in the very emptiness of the place, discovered what is special about biblical religion. The empty Holy of Holies had now become an act of expectation ... of hope ... that God Himself would one day restore His throne.

We remember our brother in Christ, Vic Simon, who was called home to the Lord on Wednesday, October 17. His funeral Mass was held on Saturday, October 20, 2018 at St Anthony's, Hoven. We offer our prayers and support to his family. Eternal rest grant unto him, O Lord, and let perpetual light shine upon him. May his soul and the souls of all the faithful departed, through Your mercy, rest in peace. Amen.
