Just a bit from Fr. Schmidt

Lessons from Leaves: Simplify or Die

When I was little, winter was definitely my favorite season of the year, but as time goes on, I have more and more love for autumn. Last year, I attended a retreat at Broomtree with other priests around this time of year. At one of the talks, I turned my chair towards the window to watch as leaves of the honey locust trees drifted down in the light of the rising sun. They fell in such great numbers and for such a long time that it was like watching snow-fall gently drifting on the breeze. It helped that our retreat master was physically blind, so that he did not notice or have any concern that I was not looking at him as he talked.

We've seen quite a bit lately with regard to the changing of the seasons, even the first snowfall. I always enjoy seeing the leaves change colors, and I was fascinated to learn why this happens as a preparation for the harshness of winter. Before the leaves fall, deciduous trees actually take nutrients back out of the leaves to be stored in the roots during the winter (or during the dry season in warmer parts of the world). One of the nutrients that many trees reclaim from their leaves is chlorophyll, the pigment that gives leaves their green color and allows them to harness the power of the sun in photosynthesis. So leaves change color before falling because the tree reabsorbs their green chlorophyll.

Also, I found out that leaves don't just fall, but most of these trees actually have specialized cells that 'cut' the leaves from the trees and seal off their places against the elements. Plants with needle-like leaves often keep them year-round, ever-green, as the needles are hardier and lose a lot less moisture than the broad leaves of deciduous trees.

Learning more about leaves during my retreat gave me opportunity to reflect: where have I perhaps spread myself too thin? What sort of pruning does God desire for me, to re-collect myself, my attentiveness, my energy, to really prepare and focus on the most important things in life? For certain plants, it can be a matter of life or death, to simplify and prepare for the winter, or die before the spring returns. Our lives have seasons as well. Continuing to pour ourselves into the same things that we always have can limit our opportunities for the growth that God wants for us in other areas. As we watch the leaves fall this season, may God help us to drop the diversions and distractions from our own lives, so that we can more fully invest in our relationship with Him and with those that God has entrusted to us.
