Foundational Issues

One discussion during each election season that I've never really understood is the criticism leveled against those characterized as single-issue voters. I tend to doubt the accuracy of this characterization to begin with. I don't think that very many voters actually just look at one issue and ignore the rest, but even if that is how they choose to vote, whether that's a good, bad, or intelligent thing to do would depend on the relative weight and importance of that single issue. As intelligent voters, we should realize that not all issues or party platform items carry the same weight. Certain issues are much more fundamental and foundational.

If the single deciding factor I use in my consideration of a candidate is, for example, their favorite color or their favorite fast food, of course this would be ridiculous and a very poor criterion to use when it comes to voting. Other issues and rights, though, can be a necessary condition for anyone to enjoy the rest of the goods of society. The right to life leaps to mind as one such foundational right. Personally, I tend to have very little confidence that a candidate or party will have our best interests at heart in the areas of education, the economy, concern for our military men and women, or any other areas, when this same candidate or party have professed themselves unwilling to defend—or even actively opposed to—the rights to “Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Happiness” of a whole class of human beings, namely, the unborn.

Now I'm not a single-issue voter myself, despite what many might say about it, but I do realize that had I not been born, little else would make much difference to me, so I don't look down upon others who care enough about life to make it their primary focus when it comes to casting their vote. The overturning of Roe v. Wade by the Supreme Court—far from finishing the fight for life—makes it more relevant than ever as it leaves the question to legislators in each State.

In South Dakota, we also have a few ballot measures to vote on, and it is helpful to read about those before being handed your ballot on Tuesday, both to speed the process and to be sure that you understand the measures. You can see a list and read about the South Dakota ballot measures online. Both bishops of the South Dakota Catholic Conference have ruled that Catholics should vote No on Initiated Measure 27. Because of its effects on the gift of human reason, the legalization of recreational use of marijuana is not something that Catholics in good conscience can support. More information is available at sd catholicconference.org. Please continue to pray for our State and country.

Word of Life

"Death is a decisive moment in the human person's encounter with God the Savior. Helping the Christian to experience this moment with spiritual assistance is a supreme act of charity. It encompasses the patient with the solid support of human relationships to accompany them and open them to hope. Palliative care and hospice are precious and crucial instruments in the care of patients with serious and complex chronic or terminal illnesses, and they help provide comfort to both the patients and their families."
